

Article Submission Guidelines

Teachers, teacher education students, researchers and teacher educators are encouraged to submit articles to QSITE journal QUICK.

Articles might be based on

- research
- classroom experiences
- teaching ideas.

All submitted articles must be relevant to the Australian Digital Technologies education community.

Required formats

All articles must be submitted as .doc or .docx (Microsoft Word) with minimal formatting. Only electronic submissions are accepted.

Images and diagrams

Any illustrations or photographs used should be relevant to the article and not used for purely decorative purposes.

Appropriate permission must be obtained for any images used; e.g., photographs of students, work samples, reproductions of the work of others, photos taken by anyone other than the author. QSITE has a permission form available for use if another is not available to you.

Images to be submitted within the layout of the word document so designation is evident.

Any images sourced from print or the Internet must have appropriate acknowledgement for use or permission obtained.

Referencing

All references are to be listed at the end of the article. All references should follow APA style (although preferably using Australian date styles and abbreviations); e.g.

- Turnbull, M. (2014, October 24). The Importance of Tech Education in Our Schools. [Speech]. Canberra, Australia: AGPS. Retrieved from <http://www.malcolmturnbull.com.au/media/speech-the-importance-of-tech-education-in-our-schools>
- Yansen, G., & Zukerfeld, M. (2014). Why Don't Women Program? Exploring Links between Gender, Technology and Software. Science Technology & Society, 19(3), 305-329.
- Google. (2014). Women Who Choose Computer Science - What Really Matters. Retrieved November 2, 2015, from <http://static.googleusercontent.com/media/www.wenca.cn/en/us/edu/pdf/women-who-choose-what-really.pdf>.
- NPR (2015). When Women Stopped Coding. Retrieved from <http://www.npr.org/sections/money/2014/10/21/357629765/when-women-stopped-coding>

Inside the body of the paper, articles, monographs, etc. should be referred to by the author's name and year, e.g., Williams (1987), etc.

How to submit your paper

Submit your article on line using the contact form from qsite.edu.au under Resources: Submit Quick Article link.

Ensure your article includes your name, contact details and a brief bio for the reader.

- Attach the word file document.
- A completed Author's Warranty form.

Include all contact details for yourself with your article, including postal address, daytime phone number, and email address and brief bio.

If you have any questions about preparing articles for submission, please contact the QSITE office on office@qsite.edu.au

Author's warranty and publishing agreement to be completed by authors submitting work for publication by QSITE. Any questions about this warranty should be directed to the QSITE office.

QSITE Author Warranty

Consent to publish form

QSITE Student Consent